JEROME THOUGHT
THAW WAS JEALOUS

And Therefore Paid No Heed to His Terrible Experiences of Fifteen Castaways on a Desert Island in the South Pacific Ocean.

New York, Jan. 24.—The end of the Thaw trial now seems in sight, as the greater part of the evidence is in the hands of the jury and practically all the defense have yet to offer is the testimony of the alienists and the inevitable "hypothetical question."

The prosecution probably have considerable in rebuttal, but the nature of this is not known. With all this, however, it is expected that the case will be ended some time during next week, which will mean a much shorter time than was consumed in the former trial.

A sensation in yesterday's proceedings came when Dr. Wagner, on the stand, declared that Thaw told him he had appealed directly to District Attorney Jerome to help in prosecuting White, but that Jerome wouldn't do so, thinking that Thaw was only jealous of White's greater success with the girls of their mutual acquaintance.

The witness said that in all his talks with Thaw the police advised him to tell the truth, while Thaw said that they used to consult and waited until she saw White, until Thaw fear for her health and reason.

DESOLATE DAYS
ON DISAPPOINTMENT

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 24.—The steamer Miowera, from Australia, brings details of the hardships suffered by the fifteen survivors of the barkentine Dandana, wrecked March 7 last on the rocks of Disappointment Island in the South Pacific, about 200 miles from New Zealand.

Twelve of the crew of twenty-seven were drowned and for eight months the fifteen castaways lived on the desolate island, subsisting on mollyhawks, the bodies of seals and seals. For nearly a month they ate the hawks and seals raw, but finally recovered six good matches from the wreck and built a fire which they never allowed to go out during the remaining seven months they were on the island. They still had two of the six matches left when they were rescued.

Canvas from the ship was used for roofing and with seals and sticks they built rude huts. When cold weather came, with storms of snow and hail, they dug out the ground inside the huts with their hands to get better shelter. They built a crude oven of mud in which they cooked the hawks and seals.

The castaways knew there was a government food depot on Auckland Island, five miles away, and spent all their time trying to build boats. They used crushed sticks, canvas, clothing and blankets saved from the ship and finally built a rude boat. This stuff was rapidly sewn together with the aid of a needle made out of the bone of a bird and some wire obtained from the wreck.

On July 21 a few of the survivors started out in this boat, but failing to find the food depot, returned on August 9. A second boat was built in September and a third in October, but both were smashed, and then the first boat was again used on the hazardous trip to the other island. There the searchers walked through brush and scrub for fifteen miles and finally found the food depot, also a good boat. In this they returned to Disappointment Island and took the others to the Auckland Island.

A month later the New Zealand steamer Hineoma, with a scientific party on board, saw the signals of distress and rescued the castaways.

SZECHENYI'S SOFT SNAP

He Will Obtain an Income of Five Million Dollars With His American Bride

New York, Jan. 24.—It is said that Miss Gladys Vanderbilt's wedding present to Count Lászlo Szechenyi, whose bride she will be on January 17th, will be a lot of $5,000,000. The count is to have the use of the income only.

Evidently, neither the count nor Miss Vanderbilt entertains superstition regarding the number 12, since the wedding invitations were sent out on January 12th. The wedding itself will take place at noon Monday at the Vanderbilt mansion, Fifth avenue and Fifty-second street.

Wife of a Man on Trial in Philadelphia May Go on the Stand with a Story Similar to Evelyn's

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 24.—With the jury box full and the prosecution's opening address completed, Andrew Jackson Delsch, Jr.'s, trial for the murder last November of Harry Ferree, began in earnest yesterday. The case will be the Thaw trial in money respects.

In his opening address Assistant District Attorney Tidlane attacked Delsch's contention that he shot Ferree, intending him for a burglar and declared that he would show that it was a deliberate murder, due to a liaison between the prisoner's wife and Ferree. The police got a confession from Mrs. Felsch of the relations between herself and Ferree and she may repeat the story on the stand in her husband's defense. The prosecution has a letter that passed between Ferree and Mrs. Delsch and pictures alleged to have been taken of her by the murdered man.
